A sensational and extremely decorative pair of Dutch 17th century ebony and giltwood carved panels. One of the panels depicts a Queen seated at her throne next to elaborately draped curtains, with a nobleman to her left, signaling to the people and armed guards in front of her. A winged angel hovers above the scene holding a laurel wreath in one hand and a feather in the other. The other panel is of the Queen in a similar situation with various figures seemingly requesting her favor, with detailed architectural elements behind her. Each panel is framed within a conforming mottled frames with a burnished and satin finish. Exceptional and richly carved.
