A high quality and most patriotic American 19th century white Carrara marble statue on it's original Vert de Patricia marble pedestal, entitled "Fourth of July". This wonderfully carved white Carrara marble statue depicts playful siblings in action and dressed in Revolutionary costumes. The young boy with a small drum below him blows a horn as he lights a miniature cannon for a Fourth of July salute. His younger sister stands beside him covering her ears for the expected report of the cannon. The children stand on a lovely base displaying leaves and flowers and children's stick figures carved into the tree stump that the cannon rests atop. The pedestal has a protruding eagle clutching a banner in its beak that reads 'E Pluribus Unum' with 'Fourth of July' below. The letters, along with thirteen carved stars representing the thirteen colonies, are highlighted with gilt.
